

Some tea expressions

Assam	The largest tea-producing region in the world, is located on the banks of the Brahmaputra in north-eastern India.
Autumnal	The autumn plucking, which takes place from October to November, produces high quality teas. The dark brown leaves yield a coppery liquor.
Broken	Broken leaf teas come from the fragile parts of the leaf, whole leaves are often deliberately broken to obtain such teas.
Camellia	The tea plant, thea sinensis , comes from Asia and is part of the camellia family, Camellia Sinensis . In its wild state, it is a tree that can grow quite tall.
China	China produces the largest variety of teas in the world: white, green, semi-fermented, black, smoky, flavoured, and compressed.
Darjeeling	Thus the most famous tea in the world is named after a modest Indian town. The plantations around Darjeeling are situated at altitudes ranging from 3,000 to 7,000 feet, on the southern slopes of the immense Himalaya.
Fermentation	It's a natural oxidation process.
First flush	In general, plucking is done between March and May, but cold weather may affect the exact date.
Green Tea	It's an unfermented tea. It results from a special preparation designed to prevent the natural fermentation process.
Black Tea	It's completely fermented. Black tea undergoes five basic operations: withering, rolling, fermentation, drying, and sorting.
Theine and Tannin	Both of its main components, theine and tannin, have marked stimulating effects. Theine has remarkable effects on the brain and central nervous system. Tea efficiently stimulates intellectual activity and clearly alleviates fatigue. Tannin reportedly increases survival rate of capillaries during a drop in blood pressure.
